How to give children in need a chance at a healthy life

Saving the lives of children – like they are our own

We heal little hearts. And bring a world of relief to parents who need it most.

Every year, over a million children are born with a heart disease. And a third of these children need medical care to survive.

While most children in the Western world have easy access to this critical care, it's a very different story in developing nations.

And it shouldn't be this way.

At Save a Child's Heart (SACH), we're addressing that – by performing life-saving surgeries on children who would not otherwise have access to this care.

As a preeminent Israeli humanitarian organisation, we also train doctors from developing countries so they can provide local paediatric cardiac care in their own communities. This is all part of our broader vision to help combat global health inequality.

To this day, we've saved over 5,700 little hearts – while upholding our values of caring for others with kindness and compassion.

SACH is also all about strengthening Israel. Since many of the children we treat are from the Palestinian Authority/Gaza and the Middle East, we are helping to build bridges to peace and foster diplomatic ties.

Because every child deserves the best medical care. No matter their race, religion, gender, nationality or financial status.

13 YEARS FOR OUR BABY.
SO WHEN I FOUND OUT SHE HAD A HEART CONDITION,
I FELL APART.’

Kone, Zeinab's Mother

Conceiving was far from easy for West African couple Iman and Kone, who tried for 13 years. So when they finally welcomed their precious daughter, Zeinab, into the world, they were thrilled. But just three months along, they knew something was wrong.

Zeinab was short of breath. She had a rapid heartbeat. And she wasn't gaining weight.

So Zeinab's mother, Kone, rushed her daughter to their local hospital in Abidjan, on the Ivory Coast.

There, the cardiologist shared the troubling news: Zeinab had several holes in her heart. She would need surgery to survive. But Iman and Kone couldn't afford it.

Luckily, a lifeline came when Zeinab's case was identified among others, to be treated in Israel with SACH.

In the autumn of 2020, Zeinab and her mother arrived in Israel for the life-saving heart operation. After an initial diagnostic catheterisation, Zeinab underwent surgery and is doing better than they could have ever imagined.

Now, thanks to SACH, Zeinab can lead a normal life – just as every child deserves.

A heartfelt thanks to our current supporters
