The Judicial College of Victoria's 2023 calendar will help you engage with emerging legal issues and expand your core judicial skills.

Learning delivered your way.

We have curated a diverse suite of events throughout 2023. With full day, half day and twilight options, our sessions will suit both new appointees and seasoned judicial officers alike.

This year, we are delighted to offer in-person events at our vibrant new learning space. When appropriate we will also continue to offer hybrid and online options for our twilight sessions.

Our focus for 2023.

Integrated jury directions in sexual offence trials, affirmative consent, stalking, and stealthing are some of the emerging issues that will be the focus of twilight events in 2023.

We have complemented twilight sessions with training on other important topics around self-represented litigants, the intimate terrorism of family violence and ground rules hearings.

On an individual note, judicial wellbeing remains a focus for 2023. The College has developed a new session on vicarious trauma, burnout and recovery to support you at all stages of your career.

We are also:

- committed to supporting the implementation of the Review of Sexual Harassment in Victorian Courts through our ‘Courts as workplaces’ training events
- collaborating with courts and tribunals to identify education needs arising from the Review of Recruitment and Working Arrangements of Staff Working in a Primary Relationship with Judicial Officers.

Please visit our website often for up-to-date information.

A moment of thanks.

We are grateful for the input of our Board, faculties, steering committees and expert judicial sponsors in the design and delivery of our events.

We would also like to acknowledge the experts and organisations with whom we continue to collaborate to ensure our events are evidence-based and reflect best practice.

A final note.

The College collaborates with the jurisdictions on a limited number of events that relate to a particular jurisdiction. These are added to the calendar throughout the year.

You can find out more about these specialist events as they become available on our website: judicialcollege.vic.edu.au/events

TWILIGHT

Understanding the subtleties of stalking.

Stalking is a common feature of family violence cases – but the risks and impacts of the behaviour are not limited to these cases alone.

In this twilight event, you will enhance your understanding of the complexities of stalking behaviour with clinical and forensic psychologist Professor Troy McEwan.

Drawing on her research and the work of the Victorian Law Reform Commission, Professor McEwan will explain:

- what stalking is – and what it isn't
- the profile and presentation of people who stalk
- the impact of stalking on victims
- how to conceptualise risk in stalking matters
- how to manage the complexities of stalking, including options for sentencing and referral pathways.

FULL AND HALF DAY

Courts as workplaces: PREVENTING SEXUAL HARASSMENT.

Explore what can be done to promote appropriate standards of behaviour and build a safe and respectful working culture in the courts.

Several questions have emerged in recent reports about sexual harassment in court environments.

This session is an opportunity for you to discuss these questions – and the experience of inappropriate behaviours – with your judicial colleagues.

Sessions are tailored to your jurisdiction and include:

- a panel discussion with judicial officers
- scenario-based conversations.

This training serves as the foundation for the Courts as workplaces: Bystander training session.

In part two of the Courts as workplaces training, you will:

- discuss the expectations of a judicial officer when responding to both perpetrators and complainants of sexual harassment
- learn how to promote a culture where sexual harassment and other inappropriate behaviours are prevented.

TWILIGHT

Courts as workplaces: PREVENTING JUDICIAL BULLYING.

Robust exchanges between judicial officers and lawyers in the courtroom are common. There are complex dynamics in this unique workplace. But when does a response overstep the mark and become ‘judicial bullying’?

If judicial officers fail to maintain the standards expected of them, confidence in the courts and VCAT is undermined, and the system of justice is impacted.

Developed in conjunction with the Judicial Commission of Victoria, this introductory session will explore:

- the Commission’s recent consultation on this issue, including development of a judicial conduct guideline
- the experiences and perceptions of judicial conduct
- what isn’t – and what is – judicial bullying
- the causes and impacts of judicial bullying
- how to promote a positive culture and support the wellbeing of all court users, including judicial officers and their staff.

FULL DAY

Judicial wellbeing for associate justices.

Exploring wellbeing through personal and collective values, ethics, experiences and support.

In this highly interactive workshop, associate justices of the Supreme Court will explore the concept of wellbeing. You will discuss how to manage the day-to-day stressors that arise in a busy court practice and identify structural and systemic matters affecting judicial wellbeing within your Division.

Working in small groups, you will also:

- design potential solutions to your identified issues
- present and discuss your ideas with the extended group
- identify next steps for implementing preventative – and responsive – measures.

HALF DAY

Understanding ground rules and intermediaries.

When should you conduct a ground rules hearing?
How should it be done? And what is the role of an intermediary?

Ground rules hearings are designed to ensure fair treatment of vulnerable witnesses, namely children and adults with cognitive impairments.

In this half-day, interactive session, you will learn how to conduct ground rules hearings – with and without intermediaries.

Led by experienced judicial officers, you will explore:

- when and how to conduct a ground rules hearing
- the ground rules process – both with and without an intermediary
- when and how to intervene when ground rules are not followed, or the question is improper under s.41 of the Evidence Act 2008.

TWILIGHT

Vicarious trauma, burnout and recovery.

Research has confirmed that vicarious trauma and burnout are occupational risks of judicial office.

It is important that you understand the risks and signs of these serious – and not uncommon – experiences.

In this interactive twilight seminar, you will learn all about vicarious trauma and burnout. You will unpack how each can arise in judicial work – and what you can do about it.

You will also explore:

- how to recognise early warning signs of vicarious trauma and burnout
- evidence-based strategies for managing the impact.

HALF DAY

Judicial ethics and public confidence.

In this half-day session, you will deepen your understanding of the ethical principles required for all who hold judicial office and grapple with ‘the grey areas’ between proper and improper conduct.

You will explore the issues through scenarios grounded in the contemporary challenges that confront members of the judiciary.

You will also cover:

- judicial independence and how to recognise conflicts of interest
- impartiality and equality – and the human biases that can affect your decision-making
- integrity and propriety – and how to separate your public role and private life
- how to maintain competence and diligence in your role.

FULL DAY

Managing the complexity of self-represented litigants.

Self-represented litigants are a diverse group. Some are adept at court procedures. Others are highly disorganised and display problematic behaviours.

In some instances your interactions with self-represented litigants can be complicated by their impaired legal capacity, mental health issues or a range of communication difficulties.

In this full-day session, you will explore how to navigate these challenges – ensuring that access to justice is achieved.

You will cover:

- the different typologies of self-represented litigants
- the relationship between stress, emotion and courtroom behaviour
- skills and strategies to respond to unexpected challenges
- how to ensure procedural fairness.

Balancing the demands of judicial life.

In this full-day event for recent appointees, you will explore the human dimension of judging – and how to take up the judicial role with optimism and confidence.

This is a cross-jurisdictional and collaborative event. Participate in facilitated conversations with your judicial colleagues to:

- learn about the known pressure points in judicial work
- explore opportunities for growth and fulfilment
- walk away with a personal wellbeing plan to support you in your judicial career.

TWILIGHT DISCUSSIONS

Optional facilitated discussions will follow later in the year.

These twilight sessions follow an open and informal structure so you can raise topics of interest and share experiences on the human dimension of judging.

Integrated jury directions in sexual offence trials.

Research shows that integrated directions promote jury comprehension – and reduce the time taken to reach a decision.

But the Victorian Law Reform Commission's report on Improving the Justice System Response to Sexual Offences showed that integrated directions are not used as often as they could be.

In collaboration with the County Court, the College is developing new integrated jury directions for sexual offence trials – and delivering training to encourage their use.

In this introductory seminar, you will learn:

- the difference between traditional and integrated directions
- the benefits of integrated directions
- how to adapt model-integrated directions.

Your trauma-informed court.

Trauma can affect how people communicate in the courtroom – and their ability to comply with directions and orders of the court.

It is well understood that many people appearing before courts and tribunals have been impacted by trauma.

By becoming trauma-informed, you can better manage the effects of trauma in your court or tribunal room.

In this experiential, skills-based program, you will:

- enhance your understanding of trauma – and how it presents in your court room
- learn skills and techniques for working with trauma-affected parties to balance procedural fairness with sensitivity
- be supported in your learning by facilitators who are experts in trauma and trauma-informed practice.

Mastering the art of judgment writing.

Do you feel burdened by the number of judgments you have to write? Are your judgments and rulings getting longer and more complex?

Learn how to step off the judicial writing treadmill – and liberate time to focus on other aspects of the judicial role.

In this two-day experiential workshop, you will participate in lectures, group work and individual practice to hone your judgment writing skills.

You will get the chance to apply structural and organisational principles provided by legal writing experts.

And you will walk away knowing:

- how to write clearly, concisely, and efficiently
- how to use narrative structure and voice
- frameworks for writing and structuring judgments.

TWILIGHT SERIES

Mental health, drug dependency and the law series.

Mental illness and drug dependency are common in people appearing in the criminal justice system. Yet they often don't get the support they need.

In this series, you will build your knowledge of mental illness and drug dependency.

You will learn about the range of supports and resources available to help you confidently respond in cases involving these issues.

You will also explore:

- the nature of mental illness and its diagnosis
- drug dependency and dual diagnosis
- access to treatment options and forensic mental health services
- the Assessment and Referral Court at the Magistrates' Court of Victoria
- sentencing options
- considerations for young people, women and First Nations peoples involved in the criminal justice system.

EXPRESSION OF INTEREST

360 degree feedback.

The 360-degree survey was first developed by the College in 2006 and has been refreshed and refined over years.

It enables you to receive confidential and formalised feedback from your peers – including advocates who appear before you, and non-judicial colleagues.

You will complete the 360-degree survey with support from organisational psychologist Maryanne Mooney.

You can personalise the survey to the specific strengths – and challenges – you face in your role. You will receive practical insights that you can use to grow in your role.

The 360-degree feedback survey is available for judicial officers with at least three years' experience, via an expression of interest process.
